C. V. Holds Up Gas Department

Claim Lowering of Gas Pipes Under West Side Bridge Would Interfere With Operation of Trains—Department Wanted to Place Gas Pipes in Concrete Casing—Conference Between Railroad and Gas Officials.

Claiming that the lowering of the gas pipes under the West Main street bridge across the Central Vermont Railroad tracks would interfere with the operation of trains, the railroad officials have stopped the Gas and Electrical Department from placing the pipes in concrete casings. The pipes are up close to the bridge planks and placing them in concrete casings would mean that they would occupy a position several inches lower than their present position. The railroad is operating much larger locomotives on its line this year than in previous years and there is a little room to spare when one of these monster engines and heavy freight trains passes under the bridge. This is the reason the railroad company objects to the gas department's plan. Just what will be done in regard to the matter will be decided at a conference of the railroad and gas department officials. A section of the bridge has been torn up by the gas department's workmen and it is said that unless the controversy is settled by today the gas department will relay the planks to safeguard the public travel. The railroad maintains that sections of the bridge that passes over their tracks and only a week or so ago replaced the old planking with new planking.

COLCHESTER SITUATION

IS LOOKING BRIGHTER.

Three of Four Children in Brown Family Are on Way to Recovery.

In Colchester Monday there were no new cases of infantile paralysis, as there have been none for several days. It is hoped that the situation is clearing up in that neighborhood, and that that community will emerge without further ill effects from a situation that at one time looked pretty threatening. Dr. Howland, who is taking care of the family of Allan H. Brown, Monday night, said that the three children of the family named Brown, and three of the four children are on the way to recovery, but the two months old child, Allen H. Brown, Jr., continues to be badly paralyzed and is in a serious condition and the chances of his recovery are not bright. In the Polish family named Switzer, not far from the Browns, on the west road in Colchester, the two months old child, only a mild attack and is recovering.

The Aaron family, who started off for their home in Colchester pretty soon after the outbreak of the disease, the year old Aaron girl sick with paralysis, are probably safely there by this time. The family of the Browns, who have been in Colchester for some time, are probably safely there by this time.
